Biographical Sketch

Martin Heidegger was a renowned 20th century philosopher and founder of phenomenological ontology. He was born on September 26, 1889, in Messkirch in southwest Germany, and died on May 26, 1976. He is buried in the churchyard at Messkirch.

Heidegger's interest in philosophy began during his high school studies in Freiburg. Upon entering Freiburg University he began studying Theology, but eventually changed to the study of philosophy, mathematics, and natural sciences. One of his main influences during this time was Edmund Husserl.

Upon completion of his dissertation, Heidegger taught at Freiburg University before moving to Marburg University in 1923. In the 1930s he returned to Freiburg University, where he was elected rector. From the 1940s until the end of his life, Heidegger spent his time writing, publishing, and lecturing.
