School Board Throws Out Ford Fund Plan

possible to get the project under way by July 28 as planned," he said.

Dr. Stoddard added that he was "very disappointed," but he did not elaborate. He indicated he would make no further effort to force the plan into the school system.

The "unanticipated delays" were not explained, but it was obvious that public opposition had slowed down the project until it was too late to start it this year.

JOIN PROTEST

Patriotic groups and thousands of parents joined the protest against the teacher training plan as an attempt to revive the UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) in the Los Angeles schools.

Mrs. Stafford pointed out frequently that the school board would have no control over the program.

After the board without a word of debate adopted Stoddard's recommendation to kill the project, Gardner explained his vote. He said:

"I believe the superintendent's heart is not in this recommendation. It constitutes yielding to minority rule on the board."

Mrs. Stafford said:

"I believe there are other things we can do to relieve the teacher shortage."
