Loyola University of Chicago

Director, Center for Urban Research and Learning (CURL), 1996-2016

CURL is a non-traditional, innovative, inter-disciplinary research center that engages in university-community collaborative research where community partners are involved in all stages of the research process from conceptualization and research design to analysis and writing final reports. I was involved in creating the center. CURL has completed more than 400 projects with over 200 community partners. CURL typically has a six-plus-member staff, involves multiple faculty and more than 50 graduate and undergraduate fellows annually. In addition to regular grant support, CURL has an $8 million endowment to support core operating expenses and some fellowships. More information at www.luc.edu/curl.
