SYNOPSIS

A documentary film about the world-famous Polish-American conductor, Artur Rodziński (1892-1958). His extraordinary career, which began in Poland, led him to become the music director of some of the most important American orchestras, including the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Cleveland Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic, and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. He conducted many legendary concerts and operas in the leading theaters of Europe and America. Rodziński's rich collection of film materials, edited for the documentary, completes his extraordinary personality.
