

LOYOLA WOMEN'S STUDIES &
GENDER STUDIES PROGRAM

Feminist Lecture Series 2021

Never Silent: Evolution of Black Women's Anti-Rape Organizing, 1965 - 1985

by Keisa Reynolds, Writer

Keisa Reynolds is a writer, educator, and anti-violence advocate from Richmond, California. They hold a MA in Women's Studies and Gender Studies from Loyola and a BA in Cultural Studies from Columbia College Chicago. Their graduate thesis research focused on Black women's anti-rape organizing in the United States between 1965 and 1985. They are co-producing a documentary with Aaron Brokenbough on the same topic. Keisa works as the Transitional Executive Director of Chicago Community Bond Fund and contributing writer to Richmond Pulse.

Black women experience multiple oppressions due to their gender and their race, and those oppressions are expounded when other social identities, such as class and sexual orientation, are considered. There have been many instances in history of social movements in which Black women have fought against the many issues they face. In the November installment of the 2021 Feminist Lecture series, we will look at 1965 - 1985 to examine the ways in which Black women organized against white supremacy and sexual violence.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9 || 4 - 5 PM CDT || ZOOM

CLICK HERE TO REGISTER TO ATTEND

LOYOLA WOMEN'S STUDIES &
GENDER STUDIES PROGRAM

Feminist Lecture Series 2021

Never Silent: Evolution of Black Women's Anti-Rape Organizing, 1965 - 1985

by Keisa Reynolds, Writer

Keisa Reynolds is a writer, educator, and anti-violence advocate from Richmond, California. They hold a MA in Women's Studies and Gender Studies from Loyola and a BA in Cultural Studies from Columbia College Chicago. Their graduate thesis research focused on Black women's anti-rape organizing in the United States between 1965 and 1985. They are co-producing a documentary with Aaron Brokenbough on the same topic. Keisa works as the Transitional Executive Director of Chicago Community Bond Fund and contributing writer to Richmond Pulse.

Black women experience multiple oppressions due to their gender and their race, and those oppressions are expounded when other social identities, such as class and sexual orientation, are considered. There have been many instances in history of social movements in which Black women have fought against the many issues they face. In the November installment of the 2021 Feminist Lecture series, we will look at 1965 - 1985 to examine the ways in which Black women organized against white supremacy and sexual violence.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9

4 - 5 PM CDT

ZOOM

TO REGISTER, SCAN THE QR CODE

